FREE coinage would increase the ratio of population in Arizona 20 to 1. We are in favor of that kind of a ratio, or even 28 to 1.

THE absurd report that Frank Hency will be appointed district in ge of this district, is on a par with the rumor that Cleveland is going to re-

Pourses do not bother the people of Arizona just now. Some of the small fry are trying to get up a scrap, but the people have a bigger fight on their minds. We have all joined hands for a common purpose.

CARTER HARMSON, mayor of Chicago, says if he were president he would relieve the stringency of the money market in thirty days by paying out silver dollars instead of treasury notes Every one would want to get rid of the bulky stuff and it would keep well circulated.

The assurance that the Sherman act will not be repealed is causing immense shipments of gold from Europe to this country. Over ten million dollars in gold per week is arriving at New York. If the Sherman act caused the depletion of gold in the treasury, how do the calf worshipers account for this influx of yellow metal

THE Boston Chamber of Commercial has instructed its members to urge the wholesale merchants who have customers in the west and south to write to them and implore their assistance in behalf of repeal of the sherman act. If an Arizona man gets one of these appeals, he will not be at a loss to know how to answer it.

A Pennsylvania Congressman named Sibley is the only one of the members of congress from his state opposed to a single gold standard. In a speech on Saturday he closed his brilliant attack on the enemy by saying that the salvation of the country depended upon the people living south of Mason & Dixons line and west of the Alleghanies.

SECRETARY CARLIS E in response to a request for light upon the subject, has transmitted to Senator Voorhees an estimate of the cost of recoming the present silver dollars and subsidiary coin if a new ratio of 20 to I were adopted. He gives the details and sums up the total cost at $112,866,321. This amount be says would have to be paid for transporting the coin to the mints, the melting and recoining and the new bullion to be added to the present dollars to make them the proper size for a 20 to 1 ratio. This latter item alone would amount to $97,000,000. The bullion to increase the weight of the dollars would have to be purchased in the open market. There are many arguments against a change of ratio, and this great expense is one of them, although thoughtless men consider that the purchase of First a cloud with silver lining, nearly $100,000,006 ounces would stimulate silver mining for a while at least. The United States would not benefit by this, as a casual observer might think. Foreign countries would rush in a supply as soon as the price would warrant it and leave the American holder out in the cold. The $97,000,000 would be a dead loss to the government and would probably have to be paid for in gold, unless the bill contained some provision for paying for it in silver. Beside this argument against a 20 to I ratio, the step would only be one toward mono-metalliem. Any change now from the present dollar, which has contained 3711 grains since its adoption over one hundred years ago, would be a surrender of principle for the sake of a temporary relief. It is to be regretted that this change of ratio finds friends in the silver producing sections of the country, which furnishes the gold bugs with the argument that we are for silver only for selfish motives. The silver men of the south and middle states are for free coinage at a 16 to 1

The Gold Bugs Fate

On the shores of the Missouri, Of the yellow, muddy water, Stood a gold bug old and heary, Pointing with his tinger westward To the purple clouds of sunset. And the gold bug, old and houry, Spake these words to Grover Cleveland Yonder dwells the silver miner With his family and children, King among his fellow workmen, Just as free as God made people. He it is who we are after; Not the farmer and mechanic, We already have the latter In our clutches, just as surely As the sun shall rise tomorrow Take your pen up, Grove- Cleveland Write a letter unto Wall street; Ask the men whose gold and gold note: We have need of in our business How to stop these haughty miners From encroaching on our calling, That of lending to the farmer In the money that is vellow, And exacting heaving measure From the proceeds of his harvest." Straightway then did Grover Cleveland Arm bimself with all his conning. Took his gold pen, diamond pointed, Dipped it in the ink that lately Had been used for better purpose; Took a scented piece of paper, Drove from out his mind this proverb "God Almighty hates a coward," Placed his hand upon the parchment, Penned these words unto his masters Come, my fellows and advisers. You, from whom I've had my learning Let us put our heads together And consult our neighbor England What to do in this dilemma." Then came back the ready answer: Grover Cleveland, do your duty To the men who hold the lever That can crush to earth the masses And yourself with one slight motion." Then the coward, Grover Cleveland, Cut the cordon that had bound him To the land that boasts of freedom. And surrendered soul and body To the cold and soulless tyrants From whose clutches our forefathers Fought and bled to save their children. Then began the greatest battle That the sun had ever looked on, That our people ever witnessed. All of thirty days it lasted. Friends of gold and friends of silver Friends of slavery and freedom Hurled their shalts until the time came For our country's fate to tremble In the balance of betrayal, Like the rumbling of an earthquake Came those words that burned and blasted

All our hopes of future freedom From the comins of gold that bound us Told us that our trusted servents. In collusion with the gold bugs, Had upset the constitution And declared in words unquestioned That our flag had been degraded, That our country was in danger, That the people who had made it All that God and man could wish for Judas-like had been dishonored By their servants, whom they trusted. Then it was that love of country And the thoughts of those who saved it Forced its way into the household; Parents talked and children wondered What made father's voice so husky. And their mother's kisses hotter Than they were before the papers Brought the news with big, black headings.

Then from out this gloom and darkness Came a vision as from Heaven: Riveted the eyes of labor, From the shores of the Atlantic To the sands of the Pacific; From the north unto the south line Of the country God had willed them. Through this chaste and purest vapor, Like a sunbeam in the darkness, Were disclosed three Christian graces Faith and Hope and third and greatest, Charity, which, Peter tells us, Covers sins in endless number: Faith, with arms extended outward, With a voice that seemed from Heaven Spake these words, which fell like dew drops

On a parched and wilted blossom : "All these years of pain and sorrow I have watched and tarried with you, Nothing fearing, nothing damating, You have placed your faith in those

Have betrayed and bartered bonor For the root of all that's evil. I have come to give you courage. Those of you who toil and suffer, And to tell you that your Master Sanctions what your conscience tells You should do to save your country From impending dissolution." And the second voice from Heaven, Hope, which man without would wither, Spake these words unto the people: "You have suffered, O, my children, You have suffered without murmur, Borne the burdens of your country, And you will displease your Master

If you longer wear the millstone That your children will inherit, Should you longer spare the weapons Which alone can pierce the center Of the tyrant's golden image." "Home above all else is sacred," Spake the last of the three graces, And these words stirred men and women To a sense of their conditions, Made their blood run red and redder. Made their hearts beat loud and louder, Made their children's eyes grow brighter.

And the old men's steps grow quicker. And they buckled on their armor, Cailing in a voice of thunder, With one long and loud defiance Challenged those who had betraved then

And their bired slaves and minions: Challenged all to mortal combat. But the mighty kings of Wall street In their bated breath made answer; Sent their armies with the banner They'd disgraced and now insulted, Then there was a great uprising From one end unto the other Of the laud we love and cherish. Driven to a state of frenzy, People rose and crushed out treason Gainst their flag and constitution. And while sitting round our hearth-

In this year of nineteen hundred, We are telling our grandchildren How it happened that their country Was betrayed, then saved and conquered

Through a cloud with silver lining. And the grave of every hero Bears an emblem of his country From one year unto the other, While the graves you see off yonder, Covered o'er with English ivy, Are those of the tyrant gold bugs Who went down before the whirlwind Of a righteous indignation,
